

Newsday CHARITIES

A MCCORMICK FOUNDATION FUND

...making a difference in our community

For the thousands of families on Long Island who struggle to feed their children, the decision to purchase school supplies is at the bottom of the list.

That's why Newsday Charities, a McCormick Foundation Fund, is proud to support the Long Island Cares School Tools program. Through the School Tools program, Long Island Cares provides families access to free school supplies to help their children attend school properly equipped for a successful learning experience. Sending a child to school with new supplies relays the message that school is important and imparts a sense of pride.

You can help support Long Island's children by making a donation to the Newsday Charities Kids Campaign at newsday.com/kidscampaign.

Newsday Charities is a fund of the McCormick Foundation. Donations to Newsday Charities are matched 50 cents on the dollar by the Foundation. Because Newsday and the Foundation pay all administrative costs, 100% of the money raised, plus the match, is granted out to nonprofit organizations on Long Island that serve children and families.

Noelle Campbell, Executive Director of Gerald J. Ryan Outreach Center, joins Paule Pachter, Executive Director of Long Island Cares, at the School Tools program store to select new school supplies for children at the Center.

School Tools is one of many vital programs supported by Newsday Charities

Long Island Cares, The Harry Chapin Food Bank is Long Island's first Food Bank: serving the hungry on Long Island since 1980. Long Island Cares' mission is to bring together all available resources for the benefit of the hungry on Long Island, provide emergency food where and when it is needed, and sponsor programs that help individuals and families achieve self-sufficiency.